Evidence, Inference and Enquiry

Edited by Philip Dawid, Professor of Statistics, University of Cambridge, William Twining, Quain Professor of Jurisprudence Emeritus, University College London, and Mimi Vasilaki

Evidence - its nature and interpretation - is the key to many topical debates and concerns such as global warming, evolution, the search for weapons of mass destruction, DNA profiling, evidence-based medicine. In 2004 University College London launched a cross-disciplinary research programme “Evidence, Inference and Enquiry” to explore the question: “Can there be an integrated multidisciplinary science of evidence?” While this question was hotly contested and no clear final consensus emerged, much was learned on the journey. This book, based on the closing conference of the programme held at the British Academy in December 2007, illustrates the complexity of the subject, with 17 chapters written from a diversity of perspectives including Archaeology, Computer Science, Economics, Education, Health, History, Law, Psychology, Philosophy and Statistics. General issues covered include principles and systems for handling complex evidence, evidence for policy-making, and human evidence-processing, as well as the very possibility of systematising the study of evidence.

Readership: Scholars concerned with the nature of evidence in philosophy, law, medicine, and statistics; also readers interested in any empirically based discipline.
